Outcomes:

North Bengal, in the real sense of the term, is an area of many people of diverse ethnic,linguistic and religious groups namely the Bengalees, Nepalese, Lepchas and several small tribes of Tibeto-Burman descent. The Political map of the region was altered by the British Government who brought more changes in this demographic identity. Side by side, the western education and culture deeply influenced the people of North Bengal. As a result, different types of Samitis and organizations sprang up in Hill North Bengal (Darjeeling,Kurseong and Kalimpang) and plain North for Promoting social and cultural awareness of people.

North Bengal was partitioned during the great partition of India in 1947.After the partition on ethird of North Bengal was included to India and two-third, to East Pakistan.

The year 1911 was an important landmark in the history of North Bengal. In that year the first caste and ethnic based social organization named the Rajbanshi Kshatriya Samiti was established under the leadership of Sri Panchanan Burma, the first post-graduate among the Rajbanshi's.
